We have had only 1 legitimate positive report (AUG) since March. May-July were strongly negative, with an uptick in the rate, a dismal increase of only ~70K jobs each month, and downward revisions of the previous reports. In June and July, the market reacted accordingly and fell precipitously. The ADP report on Thursday showed a slightly better than expected 158K jobs were created. While there is little correlation between the BOLS report and the ADP report, this is possibly a bullish indicator. Remember the # of jobs created carries more weight here than the U-3 % of unemployed, but if the rate change is divergent to the job #s, it can cause initial indecision. The investors are also suspect of the Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) cooking the books as the drop in the rate has been tied to people leaving the labor force and the election is near. With the dramatic decrease to 7.8% last month without the job creation to support, we could see some further oddity. It is easier to fudge the rate than the # of jobs. Look for 40-80 ticks on the spike, a possible 2nd peak north of 100 ticks, and a reversal of 60-120 ticks.

A medium mover, but influential and reliable orange report. It will occasionally seek a 2nd peak. The 1st peak often takes more than 1 candle to hit its max. Reversal usually exceeds the peak. Look for 20-30 ticks on the spike, 30-45 ticks on a potential 2nd peak, and 20-40 ticks on the reversal.
